Pursuant to House Rule 25, clause 5(d)(2), the Committee on Ethics hereby approves your and your spouse's proposed trip to Rwanda,¹ scheduled for August 12 to 19, 2019, sponsored by Aspen Institute, Inc., with financial support from Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, Henry Luce Foundation, Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Democracy Fund, and Eleanor Crook Foundation.

You must complete a Member/Officer Post-Travel Disclosure Form and file it, together with a Sponsor Post-Travel Disclosure Form completed by the trip sponsor, with the Clerk of the House within 15 days after your return from travel. As part of that filing, you are also required to attach a copy of this letter and both the Traveler and Primary Trip Sponsor Forms (including attachments) you previously submitted to the Committee in seeking pre-approval for this trip. You must also report all travel expenses totaling more than $390 from a single source on the "Travel" schedule of your annual Financial Disclosure Statement covering this calendar year. Finally, Travel Regulation § 404(d) also requires you to keep a copy of all request forms and supporting information provided to the Committee for three subsequent Congresses from the date of travel.

Any tangible gifts valued in excess of minimal value received from a foreign government must, within 60 days of acceptance, be disclosed on a Form for Disclosing Gifts from Foreign Governments and either turned over to the Clerk of the House, or, with the written approval of the Committee, retained for official use.

Nations all over the world have wrestled with ethnic strife and internal conflict and have taken various routes to reconciliation, some more successful than others. Women played a key role in the rebuilding of the country (when 70 percent of the remaining population was women). We will hear from a leading scholar of Rwandan history and politics on the genocide's effects on the country's policies, politics and development.

In 1994 Rwanda suffered a massive ethnic conflict resulting in the deaths of 800,000 over a 100-day period. How Rwandans reconciled with each other and recovered from this tragic period also informs the country's contemporary development and state of politics. The purpose of this visit to the Memorial, where 250,000 victims are buried, is intended to provide Members of Congress the historical context of the conflict and the magnitude of its impact. This understanding of the tragedy and the role development assistance has played in bringing the country from the depth of devastation to a model of recovery is essential as they develop federal policy.

We will visit Gahaya Links, which is an initiative started by two sisters who survived the Rwandan genocide in refugee camps in Uganda. The young girls returned to Rwanda as adults and realized women needed jobs, income and social support. They started this handicraft export company which now is a multimillion dollar enterprise that helps sustain a network of 5,000 weavers in 52 cooperatives around the country whose work is exported thanks to the Africa Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA) passed by the U.S. Congress. Sisters Joy Ndungutse and Janet Nkubana will explain their success story that has provided income and opportunity for Rwandan women through traditional weaving. This is a great example of how U.S. policy (AGOA) has a positive impact on Rwanda's economic development and women's empowerment.

Is Democracy a precondition for sustained economic growth? Political theorists have wrestled with this question. The governance record in Africa lists a minority of countries as democracies. Freedom House ranks the majority of African countries as "not free" or "partly free." Few feature inclusive political structures, and many institutions are weak in the face of authoritarian tendencies. What is the relationship of governance to economic development and what is its relevance to American foreign policy?

NUTRITION, FOOD SECURITY & AFRICA'S ABILITY TO FEED ITS GROWING POPULATION AND THE LINKS TO U.S. INTERESTS

Seventy percent of Africa's farmers are smallholders, many of them women. While there are large and highly productive farm operations in almost every country, raising the productivity of smallholders as a way to pull them out of poverty has been the objective of donors and aid implementers for a number of years, including that of the U.S. Feed the Future initiative. Rwanda has made great strides over the last decade to increase farm yield and reduce hunger. With Africa's considerable natural resources, many believe that the continent is quite able to feed itself and to become a food exporter. But, fast population growth together with growing preferences for protein-rich diets, increasing urbanization, and environmental stresses will put pressures on farm yield. Severe weather events and bad governance, including conflicts in some countries, have produced some of the world's worst humanitarian crises in which access to food is made difficult. The Feed the Future program seeks to raise productivity, empower women farmers, and raise family income, particularly in those countries that make similar commitments. Rwanda was a Feed the Future country since the beginning of the program in 2010. In 2017, the initial set of 19 focus countries was reduced to 12 with Rwanda no longer included. Two African scholars will address the nutrition challenges and food security situation in Africa and its connection to U.S. policy.

THE ECONOMIC IMPACT OF AGOA

The African Growth and Opportunity Act provides for the tariff-free importation of goods manufactured in Africa for U.S. markets. African economists state that with the rising costs of labor in Asia, these new African workplaces can operate efficiently with one-third the labor costs in Asia; and at the same time former African farmers, with training, can earn up to two to three times what they earned before.

U.S. INTERESTS AND POLICIES IN SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA: CHANGE OR STATUS QUO?

Sub-Saharan Africa comprises 49 diverse countries, each with its own histories, levels of economic and political development, cultures, and languages. Since gaining independence from European powers, many have experienced conflict and poverty, while others have made great strides toward achieving middle income status. The United States, Europe, China and Russia consider Africa as having strategic value for its oil, mineral resources, and land. It is a continent that also poses threats to American and global interests such as a source of terrorism, concerns about disease, food security, and refugees, to name a few.

A number of current and ongoing challenges confront countries on the continent. Droughts, conflicts and bad governance contribute to situations that have put more than 65 million people at risk of famine and have added migration pressures on Europe. Terrorist groups, such as al-Qaeda, Al-Shabaab and Boko Haram take advantage of ungoverned territories, often requiring U.S. military involvement. Weak health systems allow disease outbreaks to spread across borders and from one continent to another. Rapid population growth is predicted to double Africa's population in the next 30 years, putting enormous pressures on every aspect of society, from unemployment to food insecurity to energy demand. The United States has responded to these challenges with robust foreign assistance programs primarily targeted at health (the President's Emergency Plan for AIDs Relief – PEPFAR, the President's Malaria Initiative, and maternal and childhood health programs), agriculture (Feed the Future), and energy (Power Africa), in addition to democracy and security programs.

Africa also presents opportunities. Some countries in Africa have experienced very high annual economic growth rates and represent expanding markets for U.S. companies to access new customers and new sources of natural resources. Initiatives sparked by AGOA, which we will see this week, are illustrative. The number of democracies has grown on the continent although authoritarian regimes in some states restrict the rights of their citizens and the press. The United States has taken a strong interest in Africa with a large number of development and trade initiatives. A military command, AFRICOM, was created in 2006 to work with African militaries and to respond to humanitarian crises.

These initiatives are under review by the administration as some officials have signaled their skepticism of U.S. aid and development programs, suggesting that it is time to rethink how the United States engages with developing countries. Others believe that proposals to cut assistance and transition countries off assistance will have negative impacts on economic growth and with our bilateral relations with countries in the region. In this roundtable, U.S. and African scholars will offer their thoughts on how U.S. policies have affected the region and the opportunities and challenges present for the United States to move forward.

WHY A HEALTHY AFRICA IS IN AMERICA'S INTERESTS

The outbreak of Ebola in West Africa demonstrated the weaknesses in some countries' health systems, and the incidents of Ebola in the Congo, now the world's second deadliest outbreak with over 1,400 deaths in the last 12 months, have heightened awareness of the fragility of the health care in many African countries. At the height of the HIV/AIDS epidemic, Sub-Saharan Africa was considered the poster child of bad practices with regard to disease management and treatment. Since the advent of PEPFAR, the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief – an initiative that was equally shaped by Congress, prevalence rates have stabilized and in some cases declined and effective treatment has extended lives. African countries are increasingly taking on a greater role in HIV/AIDS prevention and treatment leading some U.S. policy makers to believe some countries can be transitioned off PEPFAR funding. Other diseases, such as malaria and tuberculosis, continue to pose serious problems. However, Rwanda has instituted strict monitoring at its borders and has trained its medical professionals to be prepared if called upon to respond.

Tackling chronic hunger and related stunted growth of children has become a major focus of aid programs. At the same time, obesity is becoming more prevalent as wealthier populations adopt a more western-style diet. Doctors Condo, Epstein and Sebisaho will address why a healthy Africa is in America's interests.

CHUK HOSPITAL AND HIV TREATMENT CENTER

The CHUK hospital has a 395 bed capacity and offers emergency care, intensive and high-dependency care, and surgical care. CHUK's HIV dedicated clinic is currently treating over 600 children under the age of 15, and 2,700 adults. Of those patients, 247 children and 2,340 adults are currently on Anti-Retroviral treatment (ARV). Ten years ago 90% of the patients seen at CHUK were there for HIV/AIDS treatment, and the hospital suffered from chronic overcrowding. Today, as a result of the progress made in treating AIDS, most of the hospital's HIV patients are for outpatient treatment, and the hospital has worked to disburse them throughout the entire facility, rather than in a centralized HIV/AIDS clinic, in order to reduce the stigma. Its Center for Pediatric Excellence has a cohort of HIV patients that receive treatment and counseling services. Throughout the visit we will hear from doctors and nurses treating patients and at the Pediatric Center we will have the opportunity to talk with patients about their experience living with AIDS in Rwanda. We will hear testimonials from patients whose lives have benefitted from this American involvement to reduce the HIV-AIDS impact in Africa.

We will also incorporate into this visit an explanation about innovative medical work done to make male circumcision easier. Numerous studies have shown that circumcision cuts HIV/AIDS transmission by 60%. Medical research at a separate military hospital which partners with the U.S. Department of Defense in Kigali has developed a nonsurgical, effective method for circumcision without anesthetic utilizing a $12 ring device, which has been used successfully by 130,000 Rwandan men in a program called Voluntary Medical Male Circumcision. This program receives $3 million annually in U.S. support through the Department of Defense.

Cases of Severe Acute Malnutrition (SAM) are also treated at CHUK hospital. Half of all deaths of children under five years old are from malnutrition. Dr. Jeanine Condo, Director General of the Rwanda Biomedical Center, who will be participating with us throughout our time in Rwanda, will explain what steps are being taken to address the SAM patients at the hospital, with implications for broader treatment of malnutrition.

Patients in hospitals in Africa have to depend on family members or outside sources for food. Isabelle Kamariza founded an organization called SolidAfrica to do just that, and her group operates at the CHUK hospital. She will be with us and will explain her project.

USAID's Power Africa initiative, a program authorized by Congress, is designed to help economic development by assisting in the generation of electrical power to help lift Africans out of poverty. For example, Ethiopia is considering a massive geothermal power generation project. Rwanda has a major solar farm south of Kigali, and a method of generating power from methane gas extracted from nearby Lake Kivu, a process unique in the world, which supplies one-fourth of the country's power.

Just south of Musanze we will visit a small micro-hydro power plant on the Mpenge River, which provides 1% of the Rwanda's electrical power needs. This project was made possible by a USAID-funded $500,000 feasibility study, which then was the basis for a small group of U.S. investors to raise the capital for the $15 million project, which sells power to Rwanda's national utility. Chad Bannick, a Minnesota native, is one of these American investors and he will explain the project.

EXPANDING AFRICA'S AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION

With over 70% of Rwandans reliant on agriculture production for their sustenance and livelihood, increasing yields is a key to economic development and better health. One approach of USAID's Feed the Future program provides assistance to smallholder farmers through a series of agriculture extension agents who receive training in better practices that these agents convey to their own agricultural communities. Practices taught include how to plant seeds more effectively, using hybrid seeds that provide higher yield, effective water distribution and use, and the basics of agricultural management practices such as sound use of fertilizer. We will visit one rural community of smallholder farmers to learn how they have benefitted from these programs. USAID is spending $38 million in this activity in Rwanda over a five-year period of 2015-2020. (The administration last year reduced the number of Feed the Future focus countries from 19 to 12, removing Rwanda as a focus country.)

POULTRY PROMOTION PROJECT

For various reasons, production of chickens for human consumption is not widely done in Rwanda. However, chicken meat is a good source of animal protein, and with nearly 40% of the Rwandan population suffering various levels of stunted growth from lack of protein, USAID has embarked on a three-year program to jumpstart poultry production. This project, Feed the Future Tworore Inkoko, Twunguke, is a three-way effort with $834,000 from USAID with additional support from the University of Tennessee Institute of Agriculture and the African Sustainable Agriculture Project (the humanitarian philanthropic arm of Tyson's Chickens in the U.S.). This project identifies 750 smallholder Rwandan farmers who will each receive 100 broiler chickens. The farmers will receive training from American expertise on how to raise chickens and assistance in building chicken coops, which we will see. The project also supports the inception of a chicken feed supply chain that can service the entire country. The concept is to foster a wider use of chicken raising, and chicken consumption that will help the economic viability of these smallholder farmers and increase the nutrient intake in the Rwandan diet.

ZIPLINE: DRONE DELIVERY OF MEDICINE—AMERICAN INNOVATION IMPROVING HEALTH CARE DELIVERY IN RURAL RWANDA

Keeping medical equipment supplied to rural clinics throughout Africa has always been a challenge with poor roads and being able to precisely calibrate supply and demand with the shelf life of provisions that often require refrigeration. We will see American technology applied in an innovative way to address this problem. Zipline, an American company started in Half Moon Bay outside of San Francisco, operates a fleet of drones from two launching bases in Rwanda, which can deliver vital medicines and blood to rural clinics on short notice within a half hour of receiving an order. We will witness the launcher, which boosts the lightweight battery-operator drones into the air, which fly on a computer guided path at 60-80 miles per hour and have a range of up to 100 miles roundtrip with a payload of up to 4 pounds. The shipment is dropped by parachute in a precise landing area near the recipient clinic. This project receives support from the Department of Defense Innovation Unit as the Pentagon is interested in seeing its applicability. GAVI, the Vaccine Alliance, also supports this initiative. Since operations began three years ago, over 10,000 deliveries have been made, at a rate of approximately 30 per day. The Rwandan government pays Zipline for this service.

TACKLING KIGALI'S CLEAN WATER CHALLENGES WITH AMERICAN TECHNOLOGY AND EXPERTISE

We will visit a new water treatment plant which represents a $35 million investment by the Illinois-based American firm, Culligan Water. This plant draws water out of the Nyabarongo river (one of Kigali's main water sources) and filters out the heavy sedimentation through a process of settling ponds, disinfection, and filtration, to turn brown unpotable water into clean drinking water that will be sold to the Kigali municipal water system. This is an example of American technology and expertise being utilized to bring clean water to the city of Kigali.

Congressional Program

Dear Jan:

I would like to invite you and Bob to participate in a congressional conference on Africa's Economic, Security, and Development Challenges and the U.S. Role, August 12-20, 2019 (including travel), in Ethiopia and Rwanda. We have limited space and must hear from you proactively as soon as possible if you wish to participate.

Over the last decade, Ethiopia has enjoyed high economic growth rates yet still remains one of the ten poorest countries in the world. Rwanda has made great progress since the 1994 genocide and is seen as a development success story. The different governance stories in each will also be addressed. We will go on many educational site visits, which will give you the opportunity to see firsthand examples of U.S. foreign development assistance across many sectors, including health, water resources, food security, and others. We hope to meet with the leaders of these countries, as well as U.S. ambassadors and Peace Corps volunteers.

We will have a mix of contributors from Africa as well as prominent American scholars to enhance our discussions and site visits. A tentative agenda outline is attached.

Attendance is by invitation only, with no outside observers, lobbyists, or congressional staff. Funding is provided solely by grants from established foundations—no government, individual, corporate or special interest funds are accepted.

Under guidelines established by the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, we will provide you with a signed Private Sponsor Travel Certification Form affirming that no lobbyists fund this activity, that the Aspen Institute does not hire or retain lobbyists, and that no lobbyists will be present. Our purpose is education, not advocacy.

This program is designed for Members of both the Senate and the House. Please note that because the House has adopted rules that preclude registered lobbyists from attending our events, if your accompanying spouse or family member is a registered lobbyist, the rules would bar their participation.

Departure will be on Monday, August 12th and we will return on Tuesday, August 20th. Should you accept the invitation, it is required that you participate through the duration of the conference.

The Aspen Institute, an independent, nonprofit organization founded in 1950, provides a nonpartisan, neutral forum for leaders to discuss critical issues. The Institute's Congressional Program is designed to promote leadership on selected public policy issues in the Congress by bringing legislators together with internationally-recognized scholars and analysts in high-level discussion. Since the program's inception, over 450 Members of Congress have participated in the 139 conferences we have conducted.

Additionally, we hold breakfast meetings in the Capitol throughout the year to keep Members of Congress up-to-date between our annual conferences. We hope you will be able to participate in the extended educational offerings of our breakfast series.

If you have any questions, please feel free to call me at 202-736-5825.

We hope you will join us for this important conference.

In 1994 Rwanda suffered a massive ethnic conflict resulting in the deaths of 800,000 over a 100-day period. How Rwandans reconciled with each other and recovered from this tragic period also informs the country's contemporary development and state of politics. The purpose of this visit to the Memorial, where 250,000 victims are buried, is intended to provide Members of Congress the historical context of the conflict and the magnitude of its impact. This understanding of the tragedy and the role development assistance has played in bringing the country from the depth of devastation to a model of recovery is essential as they develop federal policy.

GAHAYA LINKS – TRANSFORMING WOMEN, TRANSFORMING RWANDA

We will visit Gahaya Links, which is an initiative started by two sisters who survived the Rwandan genocide in refugee camps in Uganda. The young girls returned to Rwanda as adults and realized women needed jobs, income and social support. They started this handicraft export company which now is a multimillion dollar enterprise that helps sustain a network of 5,000 weavers in 52 cooperatives around the country whose work is exported thanks to the Africa Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA) passed by the U.S. Congress. Sisters Joy Ndungutse and Janet Nkubana will explain their success story that has provided income and opportunity for Rwandan women through traditional weaving. This is a great example of how U.S. policy (AGOA) has a positive impact on Rwanda's economic development and women's empowerment.

THE STATE OF DEMOCRACY, CIVIL SOCIETY, AND HUMAN RIGHTS IN AFRICA AND THE ROLE THEY PLAY IN DEVELOPMENT

Is Democracy a precondition for sustained economic growth? Political theorists have wrestled with this question. The governance record in Africa lists a minority of countries as democracies. Freedom House ranks the majority of African countries as “not free” or “partly free.” Few feature inclusive political structures, and many institutions are weak in the face of authoritarian tendencies. What is the relationship of governance to economic development and what is its relevance to American foreign policy?

NUTRITION, FOOD SECURITY & AFRICA'S ABILITY TO FEED ITS GROWING POPULATION AND THE LINKS TO U.S. INTERESTS

Seventy percent of Africa's farmers are smallholders, many of them women. While there are large and highly productive farm operations in almost every country, raising the productivity of smallholders as a way to pull them out of poverty has been the objective of donors and aid implementers for a number of years, including that of the U.S. Feed the Future initiative. Rwanda has made great strides over the last decade to increase farm yield and reduce hunger. With Africa's considerable natural resources, many believe that the continent is quite able to feed itself and to become a food exporter. But, fast population growth together with growing preferences for protein-rich diets, increasing urbanization, and environmental stresses will put pressures on farm yield. Severe weather events and bad governance, including conflicts in some countries, have produced some of the world's worst humanitarian crises in which access to food is made difficult. The Feed the Future program seeks to raise productivity, empower women farmers, and raise family income, particularly in those countries that make similar commitments. Rwanda was a Feed the Future country since the beginning of the program in 2010. In 2017, the initial set of 19 focus countries was reduced to 12 with Rwanda no longer included. Two African scholars will address the nutrition challenges and food security situation in Africa and its connection to U.S. policy.

U.S. INTERESTS AND POLICIES IN SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA: CHANGE OR STATUS QUO?

Sub-Saharan Africa comprises 49 diverse countries, each with its own histories, levels of economic and political development, cultures, and languages. Since gaining independence from European powers, many have experienced conflict and poverty, while others have made great strides toward achieving middle income status. The United States, Europe, China and Russia consider Africa as having strategic value for its oil, mineral resources, and land. It is a continent that also poses threats to American and global interests such as a source of terrorism, concerns about disease, food security, and refugees, to name a few.

A number of current and ongoing challenges confront countries on the continent. Droughts, conflicts and bad governance contribute to situations that have put more than 65 million people at risk of famine and have added migration pressures on Europe. Terrorist groups, such as al-Qaeda, Al-Shabaab and Boko Haram take advantage of ungoverned territories, often requiring U.S. military involvement. Weak health systems allow disease outbreaks to spread across borders and from one continent to another. Rapid population growth is predicted to double Africa's population in the next 30 years, putting enormous pressures on every aspect of society, from unemployment to food insecurity to energy demand. The United States has responded to these challenges with robust foreign assistance programs primarily targeted at health (the President's Emergency Plan for AIDs Relief – PEPFAR, the President's Malaria Initiative, and maternal and childhood health programs), agriculture (Feed the Future), and energy (Power Africa), in addition to democracy and security programs.

Africa also presents opportunities. Some countries in Africa have experienced very high annual economic growth rates and represent expanding markets for U.S. companies to access new customers and new sources of natural resources. Initiatives sparked by AGOA, which we will see this week, are illustrative. The number of democracies has grown on the continent although authoritarian regimes in some states restrict the rights of their citizens and the press. The United States has taken a strong interest in Africa with a large number of development and trade initiatives. A military command, AFRICOM, was created in 2006 to work with African militaries and to respond to humanitarian crises.

These initiatives are under review by the administration as some officials have signaled their skepticism of U.S. aid and development programs, suggesting that it is time to rethink how the United States engages with developing countries. Others believe that proposals to cut assistance and transition countries off assistance will have negative impacts on economic growth and with our bilateral relations with countries in the region. In this roundtable, U.S. and African scholars will offer their thoughts on how U.S. policies have affected the region and the opportunities and challenges present for the United States to move forward.

WHY A HEALTHY AFRICA IS IN AMERICA'S INTERESTS

The outbreak of Ebola in West Africa demonstrated the weaknesses in some countries' health systems, and the incidents of Ebola in the Congo, now the world's second deadliest outbreak with over 1,600 deaths in the last 12 months, have heightened awareness of the fragility of the health care in many African countries. The World Health Organization has declared the Congo outbreak a global health emergency. Rwanda has instituted strict monitoring at its borders and has trained its medical professionals to be prepared if called upon to respond.

At the height of the HIV/AIDS epidemic, Sub-Saharan Africa was considered the poster child of bad practices with regard to disease management and treatment. Since the advent of PEPFAR, the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief – an initiative that was equally shaped by Congress, prevalence rates have stabilized and in some cases declined and effective treatment has extended lives. African countries are increasingly taking on a greater role in HIV/AIDS prevention and treatment leading some U.S. policy makers to believe some countries can be transitioned off PEPFAR funding. Other diseases, such as malaria and tuberculosis, continue to pose serious problems.

Tackling chronic hunger and related stunted growth of children has become a major focus of aid programs. At the same time, obesity is becoming more prevalent as wealthier populations adopt a more western-style diet. Doctors Epstein, Nsanzimana, Sebisaho and John McKay will address why a healthy Africa is in America's interests.

WOMEN'S EMPOWERMENT IN RWANDA

Women lack an equal share in the political decision-making in many African countries. Rwanda is a notable exception with the highest percentage of women in its national legislature of any country, over 60%. Is there a quota system contributing to this outcome? Do women face any different barriers to political office?

Does a female majority in the legislature impact the types of issues lawmakers consider? This discussion will feature female Rwandan parliamentarians who will review these and other aspects of the role of women in Africa's governance.

CHUK HOSPITAL AND HIV TREATMENT CENTER

The CHUK hospital has a 395-bed capacity and offers emergency care, intensive and high-dependency care, and surgical care. CHUK's HIV dedicated clinic is currently treating over 600 children under the age of 15, and 2,700 adults. Of those patients, 247 children and 2,340 adults are currently on Anti-Retroviral treatment (ARV). Ten years ago 90% of the patients seen at CHUK were there for HIV/AIDS treatment, and the hospital suffered from chronic overcrowding. Today, as a result of the progress made in treating AIDS, most of the hospital's HIV patients are for outpatient treatment, and the hospital has worked to disburse them throughout the entire facility, rather than in a centralized HIV/AIDS clinic, in order to reduce the stigma. Its Center for Pediatric Excellence has a cohort of HIV patients that receive treatment and counseling services. Throughout the visit we will hear from doctors and nurses treating patients and at the Pediatric Center we will have the opportunity to talk with patients about their experience living with AIDS in Rwanda. We will hear testimonials from patients whose lives have benefitted from this American involvement to reduce the HIV-AIDS impact in Africa.

We will also incorporate into this visit an explanation about innovative medical work done to make male circumcision easier. Numerous studies have shown that circumcision cuts HIV/AIDS transmission by 60%. Medical research at a separate military hospital which partners with the U.S. Department of Defense in Kigali has developed a nonsurgical, effective method for circumcision without anesthetic utilizing a $12 ring device, which has been used successfully by 130,000 Rwandan men in a program called Voluntary Medical Male Circumcision. This program receives $3 million annually in U.S. support through the Department of Defense.

Cases of Severe Acute Malnutrition (SAM) are also treated at CHUK hospital. Half of all deaths of children under five years old are from malnutrition. Dr. Sabin Nsanzimana, Director General of the Rwanda Biomedical Center, who will be participating with us throughout our time in Rwanda, will explain what steps are being taken to address the SAM patients at the hospital, with implications for broader treatment of malnutrition.

Patients in hospitals in Africa have to depend on family members or outside sources for food. Isabelle Kamariza founded an organization called Solid'Africa to do just that, and her group operates at the CHUK hospital. She will be with us and will explain her project.

THE ROLE OF WOMEN IN AFRICA'S DEVELOPMENT

Women represent half the African population but they contribute only 37% of the GDP. Yet 27% of women in Africa create a business—the highest rate on a global scale. Women are and continue to be a powerful driving force in Africa's development, despite having to overcome huge disadvantages of gender bias, disparities in educational opportunities (African men are twice as likely to have completed secondary education as women and only 51% of African women over 18 are literate compared to 68% of men), limited access to support structures such as finance and bearing disproportionate responsibilities for child raising (Africa's average birthrate is the highest in the globe). We will hear testimonials from two successful African women whose stories are inspirational examples of the potential for women's role in Africa's development.

MICRO-HYDROPOWER PROJECT

Much of Rwanda still lacks a reliable source of electricity. USAID's Power Africa initiative, a program authorized by Congress, is designed to help economic development by assisting in the generation of electrical power to help lift Africans out of poverty. For example, Ethiopia is considering a massive geothermal power generation project. Rwanda has a major solar farm south of Kigali, and a method of generating power from methane gas extracted from nearby Lake Kivu, a process unique in the world, which supplies one-fourth of the country's power.

Just south of Musanze we will visit a small micro-hydro power plant on the Mpenge River, which provides 1% of the Rwanda's electrical power needs. This project was made possible by a USAID-funded $500,000 feasibility study, which then was the basis for a small group of U.S. investors to raise the capital for the $15 million project, which sells power to Rwanda's national utility. Chad Bannick, a Minnesota native, is one of these American investors and he will explain the project.

EXPANDING AFRICA'S AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION

With over 70% of Rwandans reliant on agriculture production for their sustenance and livelihood, increasing yields is a key to economic development and better health. One approach of USAID's Feed the Future program provides assistance to smallholder farmers through a series of agriculture extension agents who receive training in better practices that these agents convey to their own agricultural communities. Practices taught include how to plant seeds more effectively, using hybrid seeds that provide higher yield, effective water distribution and use, and the basics of agricultural management practices such as sound use of fertilizer. We will visit one rural community of smallholder farmers to learn how they have benefitted from these programs. USAID is spending $38 million in this activity in Rwanda over a five-year period of 2015-2020. Last year, the number of Feed the Future focus countries was reduced from 19 to 12, removing Rwanda.

POULTRY PROMOTION PROJECT

Production of chickens for human consumption is not widely done in Rwanda. However, chicken meat is a good source of animal protein, and with nearly 40% of the Rwandan population suffering various levels of stunted growth from lack of protein, USAID has embarked on a three-year program to jumpstart poultry production. This project, Feed the Future Tworore Inkoko, Twunguke, is a three-way effort with $834,000 from USAID with additional support from the University of Tennessee Institute of Agriculture and the African Sustainable Agriculture Project (the humanitarian philanthropic arm of Tyson's Chickens in the U.S.). This project identifies 750 smallholder Rwandan farmers who will each receive 100 broiler chickens, training from American expertise on how to raise chickens, and assistance in building chicken coops. The project supports a chicken feed supply chain that can service the entire country. The concept is to foster a wider use of chicken raising, and chicken consumption that will help the economic viability of these smallholder farmers and increase the nutrient intake in the Rwandan diet.

ZIPLINE: DRONE DELIVERY OF MEDICINE—AMERICAN INNOVATION IMPROVING HEALTH CARE DELIVERY IN RURAL RWANDA

Keeping medical equipment supplied to rural clinics throughout Africa has always been a challenge with poor roads and being able to precisely calibrate supply and demand with the shelf life of provisions that often require refrigeration. We will see American technology applied in an innovative way to address this problem. Zipline, an American company started in Half Moon Bay outside of San Francisco, operates a fleet of drones from two launching bases in Rwanda, which can deliver vital medicines and blood to rural clinics on short notice within a half hour of receiving an order. We will witness the launcher, which boosts the lightweight battery-operator drones into the air, which fly on a computer guided path at 60-80 miles per hour and have a range of up to 100 miles roundtrip with a payload of up to 4 pounds. The shipment is dropped by parachute in a precise landing area near the recipient clinic. This project receives support from the Department of Defense Innovation Unit as the Pentagon is interested in seeing its applicability. GAVI, the Vaccine Alliance, also supports this initiative. Since operations began three years ago, over 10,000 deliveries have been made, at a rate of approximately 30 per day. The Rwandan government pays Zipline for this service.

TACKLING KIGALI'S CLEAN WATER CHALLENGES WITH AMERICAN TECHNOLOGY AND EXPERTISE

We will visit a new water treatment plant which represents a $35 million investment by the Illinois-based American firm, Culligan Water. This plant draws water out of the Nyabarongo river (one of Kigali's main water sources) and filters out the heavy sedimentation through a process of settling ponds, disinfection, and filtration, to turn brown unpotable water into clean drinking water that will be sold to the Kigali municipal water system. This is an example of American technology and expertise being utilized to bring clean water to the city of Kigali.
