Walls and Bridges: Rebuilding Conservative Economics
R. Glenn Hubbard

Conservative economic ideas have centered on growth, prosperity, and flourishing. Two currents threaten these ideas and the economic gains they bring. First, some conservative voices today reject liberalism and openness in favor of populism and nationalism. Their walls against change put growth and prosperity at risk. Second, neoliberal economists and policymakers have often paid too little attention to the effects of disruption accompanying technological change and globalization on the lives of many. Conservative economics must remember bridges to prepare and reconnect more Americans to our dynamic economy to ensure social support for the disruption that necessarily accompanies growth. In this seminar, AEI Senior Fellow R. Glenn Hubbard will talk about “walls” and “bridges,” and we’ll bring Adam Smith into the conversation. The economy’s goal should be the mass flourishing Smith sought; that goal remains the North Star for conservative economic policy.

India’s Changing Role
Sadanand Dhume
Kori Schake (Moderator)

Over the past two decades, as India has drawn closer to the US, many in Washington have begun to view India as a democratic bulwark against authoritarian China. But the rise of hard-line Hindu nationalism in India raises questions about the country’s trajectory. Will the world’s second most populous nation live up to its potential and become a prosperous liberal democracy, or are we in danger of once again making an overly optimistic bet in Asia?

The Right: The Hundred-Year War for American Conservatism
Matthew Continetti

It is easy to be confused by the state of the contemporary right. Is the movement that made Ronald Reagan president the same one that elevated Donald Trump? What have conservatives conserved? And what is the future of the Republican Party? In this seminar, drawing on his forthcoming book, AEI Senior Fellow Matthew Continetti will offer a sweeping account of conservatism’s evolution, from the Progressive Era through the present. Drawing out the tension between the desire for mainstream acceptance and the pull of ideological purity, Continetti argues that the more one studies conservatism’s past, the more one can make sense of its present and its future.

The Twilight Struggle
Hal Brands

The United States is entering an era of great-power competition with China and Russia. Yet this is not the first time America has faced such problems; for 45 years after World War II, it waged and won another long twilight struggle against another authoritarian foe, the Soviet Union. In this session, Hal Brands, author of the new book The Twilight Struggle: What the Cold War Teaches Us About Great-Power Rivalry Today (2022), will lead an open discussion on how the past can inform American strategy in the current rivalries with Beijing and Moscow.

Consumer prices are rising faster than they have in decades. Inflation is wreaking consumer confidence. The Federal Reserve failed to realize it was behind the curve in curbing inflation, but did that realization come too late? Will inflation cool in 2022, or will it lead to stagnation? Will the Fed be forced to take aggressive action, and could that accelerate the economy into a recession? A panel of expert economists will discuss what to expect this year.

The ongoing term of the Supreme Court, which will conclude this spring, is exceptionally packed with consequential cases. Higher education has been the subject of intense controversy in recent years, as threats to free speech, intellectual diversity, and the academic ethic have proliferated. But to prevail in the resulting struggles, it is crucial to recall what there is to fight for in the university, not just what there is to fight against. Worries about liberal education on campus should point us toward the importance of liberal education and the essential role that the humanities can play in the life of a free society. This session will get House Members thinking about the state of higher education, both academically and culturally.

Yuval Levin (Moderator)

The administration of elections has become explosively controversial in the past few years, as both serious worries and baseless conspiracies have multiplied while Republicans and Democrats have each pursued partisan legislative measures on their own. Distinguishing truth from falsehood and fostering greater public confidence in the essential infrastructure of our democracy requires an informed and level-headed conversation across party lines. This session will give House Members a balanced look at election security, and how the notion can be reinforced to constituents.

Adam J. White (Moderator)

As the major social media platforms and other key technology companies have come to play a greater role in the lives of all Americans, policymakers have increasingly been pressured to regulate their growing power. The prospect of such action has divided the political right in particular. But aggressive talk has far exceeded careful thought on all sides of the resulting debates, and some basic questions remain wide open: What are the problems to be solved? What powers are legislatively available to policymakers? What are the potential consequences of action and inaction? This session will provide House Members insight into the potential impacts of federal legislation on technology companies.

We use the word "talent" all the time, but what is it? Do we really understand how to identify and cultivate it in children and workers? Does our educational system help or hinder it? Are we overlooking talented young people because of how we measure ability? Join us for an intriguing discussion about the state of talent development in America and what it means for our schools, universities, and businesses. This session will provide House Members insight into how talent can be cultivated within formal institutions.

There are some who suggest, in all seriousness, that World War III is around the corner. For the first time in more than three decades, there is discussion of the use of tactical nuclear weapons. NATO is rebuilding and may expand. Much of the worry and the incentives to thicken Europe’s armor center around Vladimir Putin’s bloody war on Ukraine. Few know where he will stop or if his ambitions are limited. But until war broke out in Eurasia, all eyes were on Beijing. At the beginning quietly, now much less so, Xi Jinping has been on the march: Using the wealth that sprang from reforms before his time, he consolidated power, began colonizing the South China Sea, and once again centralized the Chinese Communist Party as the manager of most economic power in China. Now Hong Kong’s freedom is gone, a million Muslim Uyghurs are in concentration camps, and Xi is overtly threatening to attack and “reunify” Taiwan with the mainland. There are hundreds of threads to pull as we discuss these growing national security and economic threats, but perhaps the most important will be: Is the United States up to the challenge—economically, politically, and militarily? We can enumerate the threats, but do we have the will, the capacity, and a strategy to meet them? This session will provide House Members with an overview of the challenges the US faces with China and Russia, and giving them ideas for how to best combat the most challenging aspects of the relationship.

As the business model of traditional opinion journalism has been transformed and some left-leaning opinion outlets have become increasingly radicalized, what are the prospects for right-of-center opinion journalism in the coming years? This session will give House Members insight into the perspectives of journalists as it relates to the issue of freedom of speech.

Professor Glenn Loury will discuss the social and economic causes of inequality. This session will give House Members insight into social and economic disparities along racial lines, potentially leading to ideas for legislative reform.

China has been unwavering in insisting on reunification with Taiwan, although the Taiwanese increasingly view themselves as Taiwanese rather than Chinese. China has modernized its military, prioritizing capabilities to threaten Taiwan's independence. Does China pose a near-term military threat to Taiwan? Could it subvert Taiwan without fighting? Leading AEI scholars will share their research on the threats China poses.

This session will give House Members insight into the current conflict between China and Taiwan, and how US foreign policy could play a role in easing tensions.
Leaving No Man Behind: The American Patriots Rescuing US Citizens and Allies We Abandoned in Afghanistan

Elliot Ackerman
Mike Edwards
Michael Waltz
Marc A. Thiessen (Moderator)

While the Biden administration is heralding its August pullout from Afghanistan as an “extraordinary success,” America’s tumultuous retreat has sparked outrage and shame in the United States and abroad. Amid a hasty and calamitous military evacuation, a terror attack carried out by the Islamic State-Khorasan at Kabul’s international airport on August 26, 2021, resulted in the deaths of an estimated 170 Afghans and 13 US service members. Moreover, despite President Joe Biden’s vow to leave no man behind, when the last American plane departed Kabul, hundreds of American citizens and as many as 62,000 of our Afghan allies were left stranded and at the mercy of the Taliban. In the face of government inaction, a handful of individuals dedicated themselves to raising awareness and getting those we abandoned out of Afghanistan. Join AEI Senior Fellow Marc A. Thiessen as he hosts Rep. Michael Waltz (R-FL), founder of Project Exodus Relief and former Army Special Operations Officer Mike Edwards, and author and former Marine Elliot Ackerman for a discussion on their past and ongoing efforts to rescue the American citizens and Afghan allies left behind during the US withdrawal from Afghanistan. This session will help House Members better understand the US withdrawal from Afghanistan and its broad impact across many segments of the US population.

Progressive politicians and experts often identify racial discrimination and material deprivation as the primary causes of poverty in America. Conservatives believe the issue is more complicated and that issues such as family formation, employment, subsistence abuse, and neighborhood safety are more important. But what are the solutions to those issues? And how big a role should government efforts play in addressing them? Panelists will share their insights around alternative solutions to the challenges of poverty and inequality. Professor Glenn C. Loury of Brown University and AEI’s Ian Rowe will also offer their perspectives on race and inequality—a preview of the conference they are organizing in Dallas this May. This session will highlight to House Members the causes and solutions to poverty in the US, sparking conversations on policy solutions.

President Joe Biden's Build Back Better (BBB) initiative collapsed. But the White House and congressional Democrats remain committed to advancing an economic and social policy agenda. What are the prospects for major legislation? What would a BBB 2.0 include? And how would Democrats’ policy goals affect the economy, workers, and households? This session will give House Members an update on the economic priorities of the current administration, leading to discussions of the role of Congress in addressing current economic concerns.
How Do We Teach Contested American History?
Wilfred M. McClay
Ben Sasse
Diana Sbaub
Yuval Levin (Moderator)

History and civic education are essential to national unity, but as we have seen in recent years, they are also inherently controversial subjects. In deciding how to teach the rising generation about the highs and the lows of our society’s past, we are forced to ask who we are as a nation and who we aim to be. How should historians, teachers, parents, and citizens approach the resulting challenges? How can we avoid both whitewashing our greatest national failings and diminishing our country’s greatest achievements?

This session will give House Members insight into the challenges higher education faces in teaching subjects like US History and how to best address them.

Stressing Institutions: The White House and the Justice Department After the 2020 Election
Jeffrey A. Rosen
Marc A. Thiessen (Moderator)

During President Donald Trump’s last month in office, he continued to repeat claims of widespread election fraud, both publicly and privately, including to cabinet officials. At the Department of Justice (DOJ), Acting Attorney General Jeffrey A. Rosen faced persistent inquiries from the president, but the department maintained its proper role and held fast to the rule of law. What really happened? What is the DOJ’s proper role? Why did the system work in this instance? And how can we move on with a renewed commitment to the Constitution?

This session will give House Members insight into the importance of institutions like the Justice Department, sparking conversations about how to best protect their neutrality.

How Conservatives Changed the World - and How They Can Do it Again
Matthew Continetti

Drawing out the tensions between the desire for mainstream acceptance and the pull of ideological purity, Continetti argues that the more one studies conservatism’s past, the more one can make sense of its present and its future. This session will give House Members insight into the importance of understanding the history of current political movements in the US.
