Securing Public Trust in Our Elections
John C. Fortier
Kevin Johnson
Yuval Levin (Moderator)

The administration of elections has become explosively controversial in the past few years, as both serious worries and baseless conspiracies have multiplied while Republicans and Democrats have each pursued partisan legislative means on their own. Distinguishing truth from falsehood and fostering greater public confidence in the essential infrastructure of our democracy requires an informed and level-headed conversation across party lines.

This session will give House Members a balanced look at election security, and how the notion can be reinforced to constituents.

As the major social media platforms and other key technology companies have come to play a greater role in the lives of all Americans, policymakers have increasingly been pressured to regulate their growing power. The prospect of such action has divided the political right in particular. But aggressive talk has far exceeded careful thought on all sides of the resulting debates, and some basic questions remain wide open. What are the problems to be solved? What powers are legitimately available to policymakers? What are the potential consequences of action and inaction?

This session will provide House Members insight into the potential impacts of federal legislation on technology companies.

There are some who suggest, in all seriousness, that World War III is around the corner. For the first time in more than three decades, there is discussion of the use of tactical nuclear weapons. NATO is rebuilding and may expand. Much of the worry and the incentives to thicken Europe’s armor center around Vladimir Putin’s bloody war on Ukraine. Few know where he will stop or if his ambitions are limited. But until war broke out in Eurasia, all eyes were on Beijing. At the beginning quietly, now much less so, Xi Jinping has been on the march. Using the wealth that sprang from reforms before his time, he consolidated power, began colonizing the South China Sea, and once again centralized the Chinese Communist Party as the manager of most economic power in China. Now Hong Kong’s freedom is gone, a million Muslim Uyghurs are in concentration camps, and Xi is overtly threatening to attack and “reunify” Taiwan with the mainland. There are hundreds of threads to pull as we discuss these growing national security and economic threats, but perhaps the most important will be: Is the United States up to the challenge—economically, politically and militarily? We can enumerate the threats, but do we have the will, the capacity, and a strategy to meet them?

This session will provide House Members with an overview of the challenges the US faces with China and Russia, and giving them ideas for how to best combat the most challenging aspects of the relationship.

Leaving No Man Behind: The American Patriots Rescuing US Citizens and Allies We Abandoned in Afghanistan

Elliot Ackerman
Mike Edwards
Michael Waltz
Marc A. Thiessen (Moderator)

While the Biden administration is heralding its August pullout from Afghanistan as an “extraordinary success,” America’s tumultuous retreat has sparked outrage and shame in the United States and abroad. Amid a hasty and calamitous military evacuation, a Taliban attack carried out by the Islamic State-Khorasan at Kabul’s international airport on August 26, 2021, resulted in the deaths of an estimated 170 Afghans and 13 US service members. Moreover, despite President Joe Biden’s vow to leave no man behind, when the last American plane departed Kabul, hundreds of American citizens and as many as 62,000 of our Afghan allies were left stranded and at the mercy of the Taliban. In the face of government inaction, a handful of individuals dedicated themselves to raising awareness and getting those we abandoned out of Afghanistan. Join AEI Senior Fellow Marc A. Thiessen as he hosts Rep. Michael Waltz (R-FL), founder of Project Exodus Relief and former Army Special Operations Officer Mike Edwards, and author and former Marine Elliot Ackerman for a discussion on their past and ongoing efforts to rescue the American citizens and Afghan allies left behind during the US withdrawal from Afghanistan.

This session will help House Members better understand the US withdrawal from Afghanistan and its broad impact across many segments of the US population.

Alternative Approaches to Poverty
Robert Doar
Glenn C. Loury
Ian Rowe
Scott Winship
Naomi Schaefer Riley (Moderator)

Progressive politicians and experts often identify racial discrimination and material deprivation as the primary causes of poverty in America. Conser-vatives believe the issue is more complicated and that issues such as family formation, employment, substance abuse, and neighborhood safety are more important. But what are the solutions to these issues? And how big of a role should government efforts play in addressing them? Panellists will share their insights around alternative solutions to the challenges of poverty and inequality. Professor Glenn C. Loury of Brown University and AEI’s Ian Rowe will also offer their perspectives on race and inequality—a preview of the conference they are organizing in Dallas this May.

This session will highlight to House Members the causes and solutions to poverty in the US, sparking conversations on policy solutions.

How Do We Teach Contested American History?
Wilfred M. McClay
Ben Sasse
Diana Schaub
Yuval Levin (Moderator)

History and civic education are essential to national unity, but as we have seen in recent years, they are also inherently controversial subjects. In deciding how to teach the rising generation about both the highs and the lows of our society's past, we are forced to ask who we are as a nation and who we aim to be. How should historians, teachers, parents, and citizens approach the resulting challenges? How can we avoid both whitewashing our greatest national failings and diminishing our country's greatest achievements?

This session will give House Members insight into the challenges higher education faces in teaching subjects like US history and how to best address them.

Stressing Institutions: The White House and the Justice Department After the 2020 Election
Jeffrey A. Rosen
Marc A. Thiessen (Moderator)

During President Donald Trump's last month in office, he continued to repeat claims of widespread election fraud, both publicly and privately, including to cabinet officials. At the Department of Justice (DOJ), Acting Attorney General Jeffrey A. Rosen faced persistent inquiries from the president, but the department maintained its proper role and held fast to the rule of law. What really happened? What is the DOJ's proper role? Why did the system work in this instance? And how can we move on with a renewed commitment to the Constitution?

This session will give House Members insight into the importance of institutions like the Justice Department, sparking conversations about how to best protect their neutrality.
