Dear Colleague:

Pursuant to House Rule 25, clause 5(d)(2), the Committee on Ethics hereby approves your and your spouse's proposed trip to Sea Island, Georgia, scheduled for March 10 to 12, 2023, sponsored by American Enterprise Institute.

You must complete a Member/Officer Post-Travel Disclosure Form and file it, together with a Sponsor Post-Travel Disclosure Form completed by the trip sponsor, with the Clerk of the House within 15 days after your return from travel. As part of that filing, you are also required to attach a copy of this letter and both the Traveler and Primary Trip Sponsor Forms (including attachments) you previously submitted to the Committee in seeking pre-approval for this trip. You must also report all travel expenses totaling more than the reporting threshold from a single source on the "Travel" schedule of your annual Financial Disclosure Statement covering this calendar year. That reporting threshold is currently $415 but is set to adjust in 2023. Finally, Travel Regulation § 404(d) also requires you to keep a copy of all request forms and supporting information provided to the Committee for three subsequent Congresses from the date of travel.

If you have any further questions, please contact the Committee's Office of Advice and Education at extension 5-7103.

Sincerely,

Michael Guest
Chairman

	At a time when many American cities are struggling, a new documentary showcases important lessons from New York City’s recovery in the 1990s and 2000s. Gotham: The Fall and Rise of New York shows how new leadership and bold reforms saved America’s largest city from economic stagnation, rampant violent crime, failing schools, and an epidemic of arson, graffiti, and abandoned buildings. The film tells New York’s comeback story through interviews with the policymakers behind it, including William Bratton, Robert Doar, Raymond Kelly, and, of course, Rudy Giuliani, alongside other New Yorkers who witnessed their city’s return to greatness.

Can Classical Schools Renew American Education?

Michael Ortner, Daniel Scoggin, Jenna Silber Storey, and Benjamin Storey (Moderator)

Progressive assumptions about human nature and society now routinely shape the curriculum and organization of public schools. The rapidly growing movement of classical schools—which now educate about one million American students—is significant in part because it challenges these most fundamental assumptions. What precisely is classical education? And what contribution might it make to the renewal of American society?

How Cities Are Shaping the Future of American Politics and Policy

Edward L. Glaeser, Mattie Parker, Francis X. Suarez, Ryan Streeter (Moderator)

Cities have been in the news a lot the past couple of years because of rising crime, pandemic-fueled migration, and empty downtowns. Many of these cities are paying a price for years of bad policies that have underserved residents' daily needs, and yet cities are too important a part of the American economy for them to remain in a troubled state. Lessons can be learned from those cities that have gone in the other direction because of their pro-growth, commonsense policies and have served as a haven for people fleeing urban dysfunction elsewhere. How can our ailing urban areas bounce back? Has the dysfunction created new opportunities for a new generation of reform-minded city leaders? Should we be optimistic or pessimistic about the future of America's cities? Join us for a lively discussion with academic experts and mayors who have been looking for and providing answers to these and related questions.

Edmund Burke thought that “future wisdom” stems from “the past errors and infirmities of mankind.” And so it is with a post-Vladimir Putin Russia: For a long time, it will be shaped by the biggest error of Putin’s life, his war on Ukraine. The Department of Justice (DOJ) is an executive agency that answers to the president, but it has long been insulated from partisan micromanagement through norms and traditions. In recent decades, however, the DOJ has found itself almost constantly embroiled in political controversies—the DOJ has both outside pressures and its own actions. How could the department better handle this challenge, and how could more effective congressional oversight help?

U.S. – Asia Outlook: Opportunities and Threats

Aaron Friedberg, Chris Miller, and Mike Gallagher, Kori Schake (Moderator)

China has loomed as the primary national security threat in the past two presidencies. The director of national intelligence and military commanders believe the gravest military threat from China will be between now and 2027. Allies want a US vision for how all of us can reduce our reliance on Chinese inputs and manufacturing to better secure our supply chains against geopolitical risk, but the Biden administration has failed to deliver. But they have taken several steps, as has Congress, to exclude China from high-tech sectors. President Joe Biden has repeatedly said he would send American troops to defend Taiwan, but he has neither matched those statements to the necessary military spending nor prepared the American public for such a conflict. Do we have the right tools in place to manage China? Are we making enough progress militarily to deter China?

Have We Passed Peak Woke?

Bari Weiss, Thomas Chatterton Williams, and Ross Douthat (Moderator)

Recent years witnessed the ascent of “woke” ideology in education, media, business, the professions, and culture in America and across much of the West. Its transformation of our elite institutions has yielded a backlash that contributed mightily to the populist mood of our politics. Is the worst of this wave now behind us? Is it building still? How has it responded to the backlash against it, and how is its character changing?

The Military We Need

Joni Ernst (R-IA), Roger Wicker (R-MS) and Mackenzie Eaglen (Moderator)

Despite its prowess, the United States military is shrinking, aging, and becoming ever more expensive. How can the military stay on the cutting edge, interesting to American youth, and prepared for worst-case scenarios, including in Asia?

Energy Policy: Challenges at Home and Abroad

Doug Burgum, Steven Koonin, Chris Wright, Daniel Yergin, and James Coleman (Moderator)

In a $100 trillion global economy that depends on hydrocarbons for 80 percent of its energy, moving to cleaner sources of energy is more challenging than our politicized debates usually acknowledge. And yet amazing strides in energy innovation are making possible new energy sources and access to cleaner energy than we could have imagined a generation ago. What is the actual (nonpolitical) state of play in climate science? Which forms of energy innovation hold the most promise? And how have the recent geopolitics of hydrocarbons changed the policy landscape for America and its allies? Join us for an all-star panel that will explore answers to these and other important questions.

How to Fix Congress
Patrick McHenry (R-NC), Jimmy Panetta (D-CA), Scott Peters (D-CA)
and Yuval Levin (Moderator)

It's easy to complain that Congress is broken. But what exactly is it failing to do? What would a functional first branch of government look like? And what might be required to get there? Members of Congress of both parties will explore these crucial questions, clarify their differences, and look for common ground.
