Can Classical Schools Renew American Education?

Michael Ortner
Daniel Scoggin
Benjamin Storey
Jenna Silber Storey (Moderator)

Progressive assumptions about human nature and society now routinely shape the curriculum and organization of public schools. The rapidly growing movement of classical schools—which now educate about one million American students—is significant in part because it challenges these most fundamental assumptions. What precisely is classical education? And how might it contribute to the renewal of American society?

How Cities Are Shaping the Future of American Politics and Policy

Edward Glaeser

Ryan Streeter (Moderator)

Cities have been in the news a lot the past couple of years because of rising crime, pandemic-fueled migration, and empty downtowns. Many of these cities are paying a price for years of bad policies that have underserved residents' daily needs, and yet cities are too important a part of the American economy for them to remain in a troubled state. Lessons can be learned from those cities that have gone in the other direction because of their pro-growth, commonsense policies and have served as a haven for people fleeing urban dysfunction elsewhere. How can our ailing urban areas bounce back? Has the dysfunction created new opportunities for a new generation of reform-minded city leaders? Should we be optimistic or pessimistic about the future of America's cities? Join us for a lively discussion with academic experts and mayors who have been looking for and providing answers to these and related questions.

On the political right, economic policy has been unusually dynamic. On the left, internal debates pit neoliberals against more market-skeptical progressives. How will these conflicts be resolved? Which camps will come out on top? A Conversation with Stacy Schiff

Robert Doar (Moderator)

"Even if forced to at gunpoint, Stacy Schiff would be incapable of writing a dull page or a lame sentence." So said famed biographer Ron Chernow—a sentiment echoed by critics and reviewers throughout Schiff's career. Schiff won the Pulitzer Prize in 2000 for Véra (Mrs. Vladimir Nabokov), her bestselling biography of Vladimir Nabokov's wife. Since then, Schiff has shaped the popular imagination, immersing readers in the mysteries of historical figures as varied as Cleopatra, the Salem witches, and Benjamin Franklin—and topping the New York Times bestseller list again and again in the process. Hailed as a "tour de force," her most recent work, The Revolutionary: Samuel Adams, reintroduces Americans to the most essential Founding Father—the one who stood behind the change in thinking that produced the American Revolution and, later, the idea of the American dream. Join Schiff and AEI President Robert Doar for a conversation on her work, the historian's challenge of uncovering the past, and the art of writing well.

White (Moderator)	The Department of Justice (DOJ) is an executive agency that answers to the president, but it has long been insulated from partisan micro-management through norms and traditions. In recent decades, however, the DOJ has found itself almost constantly embroiled in political controversies—thanks to both outside pressures and its own actions. How could the department better handle this challenge, and how could more effective congressional oversight help?
	Will the US Be in a Recession in 2023? Jan Hatzius Michael R. Strain Lawrence H. Summers Mark M. Zandi James Pethokoukis (Moderator)	The labor market is booming. Employers can't satiate their demand for workers, with two job vacancies for every one unemployed worker. Consumer spending has proven surprisingly resilient to decades-high price inflation, feeding businesses' need for workers. Over the past year, the Federal Reserve has made little progress toward reducing the underlying rate of consumer price inflation. The reigning paradigm at the Fed and on Wall Street for monetary policy's response to the overheated economy has been a few more quarter-point hikes in interest rates at consecutive Fed meetings, followed by a pause. That paradigm is increasingly in doubt. What is the outlook for monetary policy in 2023? And what are the implications of that outlook for financial markets and the real economy? Will the US economy be in recession this year?

The director of national intelligence and military commanders believe the gravest military threat from China will be between now and 2027. Allies want a US vision for how all of us can reduce our reliance on Chinese inputs and manufacturing to better secure our supply chains against geopolitical risk. The Biden administration has failed to deliver, but it has taken several steps, as has Congress, to exclude China from high-tech sectors. President Joe Biden has repeatedly said he would send American troops to defend Taiwan, but he has neither matched those statements to the necessary military spending nor prepared the American public for such a conflict. Do we have the right tools in place to manage China? Are we making enough progress militarily to deter China?

And yet amazing strides in energy innovation are making possible new energy sources and ways to access cleaner energy that we could not have imagined a generation ago. What is the actual (nonpolitical) state of play in climate science? Which forms of energy innovation hold the most promise? And how have the recent geopolitics of hydrocarbons changed the policy landscape for America and its allies? Join us for an all-star panel that will explore answers to these and other important questions. Recent years witnessed the ascent of “woke” ideology in education, media, business, the professions, and culture in America and across much of the West. Its transformation of our elite institutions has yielded a backlash that contributed mightily to the populist mood of our politics. Is the worst of the wave of wokeness now behind us? Is it building still? How has it responded to the backlash against it, and how is its character changing? Despite its prowess, the United States military is shrinking, aging, and becoming ever more expensive. The Defense Department is also struggling to adapt commercial technologies for military use in a post-monopsony market and attract new recruits. How can the military stay on the cutting edge, interesting to American youth, and prepared for worst-case scenarios, including in Asia?

	Gotham: The Fall and Rise of New York At a time when many American cities are struggling, a new documentary showcases important lessons from New York City's recovery in the 1990s and 2000s. Gotham: The Fall and Rise of New York shows how new leadership and bold reforms saved America's largest city from economic stagnation, rampant violent crime, failing schools, and an epidemic of arson, graffiti, and abandoned buildings. The film tells New York's comeback story through interviews with the policymakers behind it, including William Bratton, Robert Doar, Raymond Kelly, Heather Mac Donald, and, of course, Rudy Giuliani, alongside other New Yorkers who witnessed their city's return to greatness.

	Roaring Twenties 2.0: Will Artificial Intelligence and Other Tech Advances Supercharge the US Economy? Erik Brynjolfsson Tyler Cowen Scott Gottlieb James Pethokoukis (Moderator) Artificial intelligence is rapidly advancing. Though advances in information technology have been reshaping the US labor market for years, the pace of change has likely accelerated. What are the implications for productivity growth, inequality, and employment stability? And what are the broader implications for society's future in a world where machines can do more and more?

	Can Major Parties Get Their Acts Together in Time for 2024? David Brooks Chris Christie Rob Portman Chris Stirewalt (Moderator) A divided conservative movement, bitter personal rivalries, and a potentially crowded field of hopeful nominees are all likely to make Republicans' road to the 2024 elections long and hard. For Democrats, serious questions about a Joe Biden–Kamala Harris ticket and their own ideological tensions could present great hurdles to clear. Further controversies are bound to emerge between and within the parties, especially over their shifting priorities on pressing problems abroad and their failures to address ever-growing deficits and the national debt. Our panelists will discuss these looming issues and give their first takes on what they heard from potential presidential candidates during our World Forum.
