In this capacity, Caitlin is the primary owner of a variety of operations support tasks such as project management, external communications, event planning and data analysis; and will serve as the Center's principal for specific initiatives to advance the mission of the Center. Her experience includes more than ten years in academia and healthcare, where she has been responsible for strategic events management, events marketing and design, and community and professional education. Prior to joining CGEP, she served as the Assistant Director of Special Events and Programs for Columbia College and the Fu Foundation School of Engineering and Applied Science.

15.3 miles, 45-minute estimated drive

Senior Faculty from Columbia University will share with the staff delegation the details of the day with a planned visit to Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory, Palisades, NY. The researchers and scholars leading the tours will educate staff on their respective scientific subjects, which will enhance the attendees' understanding of the relationship between historical earth data and climate change.

The Lamont–Doherty Earth Observatory is the scientific research center of the Columbia Climate School, and a unit of The Earth Institute at Columbia University. It focuses on climate and earth sciences and is located on a 189-acre campus in Palisades, New York, 18 miles north of Manhattan on the Hudson River. Lamont-Doherty is a unique research enterprise, bringing together courageous, entrepreneurial thinkers dedicated to bold exploration and discoveries that illuminate their understanding of Earth's processes and the myriad ways our planet is changing as our climate warms. Since its founding in 1949, Lamont has been a leader in the Earth sciences, and is now the scientific research heart of the Columbia Climate School founded in 2020. They are a dynamic community of 500 scientists, students, and staff, with nearly 300 PhD-level researchers, and 80-90 graduate students involved in research. Their scientists study the planet from its deepest interior to the outer reaches of its atmosphere, on every continent and in every ocean, providing a rational basis for the difficult choices facing humanity.

2:00 PM – 2:45 PM Core Repository Lab Tour and Discussion
Lamont-Doherty Geoscience Building

Nichole Anest—Curator of Lamont-Doherty Core Repository

Nichole will lead the tour of the core repository lab. She has worked for the Earth Observatory for over twenty years, first as a Senior Research Staff Assistant and then as a Curator for almost ten years. Nichole earned her bachelor's degree in environmental science/geology from Rutgers University.

2:45 PM – 3:30 PM Rock Mechanics Lab Tour and Discussion
Lamont-Doherty Lab Building

Christine McCarthy—Lamont Associate Research Professor, Seismology, Geology and Tectonophysics

Christine will lead the tour of the rock mechanics lab. She has worked at the Earth Observatory for over seven years as a research professor. Christine was a Postdoctoral Fellow at the University of Tokyo after she obtained her Doctorate from Brown University. Christine holds a bachelor's degree in communications from California State University, Long Beach, a bachelor's degree in geophysics from the University of Oregon, and a Ph.D. in geophysics from Brown University.

Christine's research explores the way that micro-features control macro-behavior. Defects in the structure of crystalline materials, such as impurities, dislocations, grain boundaries, and partial melt, all affect the way that seismic waves are damped in the mantle, for instance, or how tidal energy is turned into heat within an icy moon's outer shell. In order to better interpret seismic data and provide better constraints for geophysical modeling, she designs experiments to isolate and scrutinize the underlying microphysics of defect-controlled processes such that resultant laboratory data can be scaled up to macroscopic settings. With material properties being the constant element, her work spans a variety of time and length scales and geologic contexts: from the deep earth, to the cryosphere, to the outer solar system.

3:30 PM – 4:15 PM Tree-Ring Lab Tour and Discussion
Tree-Ring Building

Brendan Buckley—Lamont Research Professor, Biology and Paleo Environment Division

Brendan will lead the tour of the tree-rings lab. He holds the position of Lamont Research Professor, and has been a long-time member of the Tree Ring Lab at the Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory of Columbia University (LDEO). While he has worked in locations around the globe, Brendan has been one of the pioneers of tropical dendroclimatology, having produced the longest and best replicated records of absolutely dated tree ring sequences from Southeast Asia. Among his most important discoveries were the identification of two key periods of drought that coincided with the two most tumultuous periods of the past millennium over Southeast Asia – the Angkor droughts of the late 14th/early 15th century, and the Strange Parallels Drought of late 18th century, respectively. He continues this important work by using new methods to develop discrete seasonal reconstructions of regional hydroclimate, including measures of the strength of summer and winter monsoons, as well as the “shoulder” seasons that lead into and out of them, over the past millennium.

Brendan is a proponent of interdisciplinary research, working with historians, archaeologists, geochemists and atmospheric scientists. Along with his research in the Asian tropics, he has a long history of research in the North American boreal forests, having conducted some of the first dendroclimatic forays in northern Labrador, Canada, and North America's northernmost trees in the Firth River of Alaska. He was also instrumental in developing the longest temperature reconstructions from the Southern Hemisphere as part of his PhD research in Tasmania and New Zealand.

Brendan received his undergraduate degree in Physical Geography from Plymouth State College in New Hampshire, a Masters degree from Arizona State University in Tempe, and his PhD from the Institute of Antarctic and Southern Ocean Studies (IASOS) at the University of Tasmania, Australia. He held Post-doctoral positions at the University of Auckland, New Zealand and at the Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory of Columbia University, before commencing his current LDEO position in 1999.

Edward Cook—Ewing Lamont Research Professor, Biology and Paleo Environment Division

Edward will lead the tour of the tree-rings lab. He is a climate scientist in drought, hydroclimate, and interactions between the land surface and climate system.

Nicole Davi—Adjunct Senior Research Scientist, Biology and Paleo Environment Division

Nicole will lead the tour of the tree-rings lab. She is an Adjunct Senior Research Scientist at the Tree-Ring Laboratory at Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory and a professor and chair of the Department of Environmental Science at William Paterson University. Nicole's research focuses on developing and interpreting high-resolution paleoclimatic records in order to further our understanding of climate change over the past 2000 years. She has authored/co-authored dozens of peer-reviewed articles on paleoclimate and has received awards from National Science Foundation and other funding agencies for her research. Nicole also has several projects that focus on improving science literacy for undergraduate and K-12 students, and also for public audiences. Nicole often collaborates with artists to explore new and compelling ways to communicate the excitement of scientific explorations with diverse audiences.

4:15 PM – 5:00 PM

Closing Meeting with Dean Maureen Raymo
Directorate Conference Room, Monell Building

In this meeting, Maureen will lead the post-lab tour discussion and answer questions attendees have about what they have learned.

Maureen Raymo, Co-Founding Dean of the Columbia Climate School

Maureen E. Raymo is Co-Founding Dean of the Columbia Climate School, Director of the Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory, G. Unger Vetlesen Professor of Earth & Environmental Sciences, and Director of the Lamont-Doherty Core Repository. She has degrees from Brown and Columbia Universities and studies the history and causes of climate change in Earth's past. She is best known for the Uplift-Weathering Hypothesis that ties global cooling and the onset of the ice ages to a drawdown in atmospheric CO₂ caused by the uplift of the Himalayas and Tibetan Plateau.

In addition to publishing fundamental work on the stratigraphy and chronology of the recent geologic epochs, Maureen has also proposed hypotheses explaining the patterns of ice sheet variability observed over the last few million years and developed new ways of studying past sea level change. In 2014 she was the first woman to be awarded the Wollaston Medal by the Geological Society of London, their most prestigious award given out annually since 1831.

Maureen's research has always focused on documenting how and discovering why the Earth's oceans, biogeochemical cycles, and climate have changed in the past, knowledge that is integrated with numerical models of past and future climate. Through detailed analysis of deep sea sediment cores, she has generated records of geochemical, paleontological, and paleoclimatic change that have advanced the study of Earth's climate on tectonic, orbital, and millennial time scales.

For much of her career she has also worked to improve the timescales and stratigraphy that provide the foundation for the study of Earth's history. Most recently her research group has focused on the reconstruction of sea level and ice volume during past warm climate intervals with the goal of improving predictions of future sea level rise in response to global warming.

Senior Faculty from Columbia University will share with the staff delegation the details of the day with a planned visit to Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory, Palisades, NY. The researchers and scholars leading the tours will educate staff on their respective scientific subjects, which will enhance the attendees' understanding of the relationship between historical earth data and climate change.

The Lamont–Doherty Earth Observatory is the scientific research center of the Columbia Climate School, and a unit of The Earth Institute at Columbia University. It focuses on climate and earth sciences and is located on a 189-acre campus in Palisades, New York, 18 miles north of Manhattan on the Hudson River. Lamont-Doherty is a unique research enterprise, bringing together courageous, entrepreneurial thinkers dedicated to bold exploration and discoveries that illuminate their understanding of Earth's processes and the myriad ways our planet is changing as our climate warms. Since its founding in 1949, Lamont has been a leader in the Earth sciences, and is now the scientific research heart of the Columbia Climate School founded in 2020. They are a dynamic community of 500 scientists, students, and staff, with nearly 300 PhD-level researchers, and 80-90 graduate students involved in research. Their scientists study the planet from its deepest interior to the outer reaches of its atmosphere, on every continent and in every ocean, providing a rational basis for the difficult choices facing humanity.

- 2:00 PM Lab Tours and Discussions

We will meet with various scientists and leading researchers who will give a tour of their laboratories and discuss their research. Lab visits will include the core repository lab, marine biology lab, tree-ring lab, and rock mechanics lab.

Closing Meeting with Dean Maureen Raymo

Directorate Conference Room, Monell Building

In this meeting, Maureen will lead the post-lab tour discussion and answer questions attendees have about what they have learned.

Maureen E. Raymo is Co-Founding Dean of the Columbia Climate School, Director of the Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory, G. Unger Vetlesen Professor of Earth & Environmental Sciences, and Director of the Lamont-Doherty Core Repository. She has degrees from Brown and Columbia Universities and studies the history and causes of climate change in Earth's past. She is best known for the Uplift-Weathering Hypothesis that ties global cooling and the onset of the ice ages to a drawdown in atmospheric CO₂ caused by the uplift of the Himalayas and Tibetan Plateau. In 2014 she was the first woman to be awarded the Wollaston Medal by the Geological Society of London, their most prestigious award given out annually since 1831.

Maureen's research has always focused on documenting how and discovering why the Earth's oceans, biogeochemical cycles, and climate have changed in the past, knowledge that is integrated with numerical models of past and future climate. Through detailed analysis of deep sea sediment cores, she has generated records of geochemical, paleontological, and paleoclimatic change that have advanced the study of Earth's climate on tectonic, orbital, and millennial time scales.

For much of her career she has also worked to improve the timescales and stratigraphy that provide the foundation for the study of Earth's history. Most recently her research group has focused on the reconstruction of sea level and ice volume during past warm climate intervals with the goal of improving predictions of future sea level rise in response to global warming.
