Federated learning, where the model is shared rather than the data, enables broad data access supporting model generalizability and bias mitigation. Hence, federated research networks can be significantly augmented by clinical LLMs and GenAI to structure electronic health records (EHRs) for AI applications, support advanced analytics on multimodal data, compose patient charts from verbal physician-patient interactions, and generate discharge notes. LLMs can also help facilitate research and clinical decision-making, improving patient care. Due to inherent biases and risks of generating inaccurate information (hallucinations), LLMs should however be used as co-pilots or under human supervision to prevent patient harm. Ultimately, we are now at a pivotal time where federated learning and GenAI approaches have the potential to significantly impact AI implementation across healthcare. Speakers: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Vishakha Sharma, Senior Principal Data Scientist, Roche • Michael Pfeffer, Chief Information and Digital Officer, Stanford Health Care • Sonya Makhni, Medical Director of Applied Informatics, May Clinic • Frederik Buijs, Senior Global Medical Director, Roche Pharmaceuticals OR Transform Your Future: Key Strategies for Digital Change Success Description: In today's fast-paced healthcare technology landscape, leaders are at the forefront of driving successful digital software adoption. This is a true innovative approach to redefining the healthcare team. Children with Medical Complexity (CMC) are a vulnerable population that require special medical treatment. When emergencies occur at home, many of these children are treated by local EMS, such as fire/rescue and Emergency Departments (EDs). EMS and EDs have minimal training caring for CMC, leaving them and the patients vulnerable. Project Austin provides children with an individualized emergency medical plan (EMP). These care plans are put into the hands of emergency responders as guidance for emergency care of the child. Concisely put, this team has applied a unique cadre of technologies to ensure CMC in Nebraska (and beyond) receive specialized care, saving lives in emergent situations. This project was called “impossible to scope” by numerous others, yet persistence and a calling to care for others among this collaborative team gave them the inspiration and motivation to make the “impossible” a reality. Speakers: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Natalie McCawley, Project Austin Cofounder, University of Nebraska • Tiffany Simon, Project Austin Cofounder, University of Nebraska • Chad Campbell, Director, Project Management Office, InterScripts
